Nancy Weiss Malkiel, a professor of history and the author of Keep the Damned Women Out: The Struggle for Coeducation, will explore the fundamental change in higher education caused by coeducation. She will address the question: How well was it implemented? Malkiel served as Dean of Coeducation at Princeton University, examining the implementation of coeducation at Princeton and how well it was implemented, as well as the challenges they faced.

General David H. Petraeus, one of the most influential people of the 21st century, General Petraeus served more than 37 years in the U.S. military including command of coalition forces in Afghanistan and Iraq, of U.S. Central Command, and the United States military including command of coalition forces. Following his service in the military, Petraeus served as the Director of the CIA. He has received numerous U.S. military, State Department, NATO and United Nations medals and awards, and has been decorated by officials of 12 foreign countries. He currently is the Chairman of the KKR Global Institute and is a member of the advisory boards of several veterans' organizations.
